A Bit of Medina Community Band and Gazebo History

The Medina Community Band dates back to 1859. The early band played on Saturday evenings, seated in a horse-drawn band wagon that was drawn around the Square. The band numbered 12 to 15 musicians, mostly horns and percussion. In the early days, the Square was enclosed with a white rail fence because of the cattle drives that went through the town. The band's original name was The Medina Silver Cornet Band. Now the Medina Community Band fills the Gazebo with very dedicated and talented wind and percussion musicians that are all volunteers, ranging from high school age students to older adults. The band has a yearly repertoire of 100 to 200 different pieces of music. Over the band's lifetime, there have been 20 conductors. The current conductor, Marcus Neiman, has held that position since 1972.

Over time, the center of the Square was anchored with three different fountains, and one even had fish. During those times, the band played on the other structure in the Square called the bandstand. The band now plays in the Medina Square Gazebo which was dedicated on June 13, 1975. It is a nearly-exact replica of a period gazebo from Bellville, OH. The Medina Gazebo was featured on a 2018 Rose Bowl float and won the trophy for the "Most Beautiful Non-Commercial Float."
